Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the gentleman from Ohio for the kind remarks he has made, and also the gentleman from New Jersey, (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this legislation, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5617, as amended.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 14. The provisions of this Act shall take effect on October 1, 1984.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER) will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from California (Mr. MOORHEAD) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER).

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

(Mr. KASTENMEIER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks.)

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon, I bring before the House three bills all designed to improve the administration of justice in this country. The three bills are: H.R. 4145, the State Justice Institute Act of 1983; H.R. 4307, the Criminal Justice Act Revision of 1984; and H.R. 4249, the U.S. Marshals Service and Witness Security Reform Act of 1983.

Although debate occurs now on the first of the three bills—State Justice Institute—I mention all three at this time because, considered together, they provide a rational and consistent approach to improving judicial machinery, especially as it relates to the criminal justice system. The State Justice Institute proposal, by assisting State courts to improve themselves, will have a positive effect on the disposition of all cases at the State level. Any argument that there is no relationship between the State Justice Institute and the need to fight crime can easily be put to rest. In a letter (July 29, 1981) to Chairman PETER W. RODINO, Assistant Attorney General Robert A. McConnell stated:

> The administration has identified violent crime as an area of priority concern. . . . The State Justice Institute proposal does have some general relationship to this priority, since many of the projects funded by the Institute would presumably contribute, directly or indirectly, to improvement of the ability of the State courts to deal with violent crime, and crime in general.

The plain fact is that the vast bulk of criminal litigation in this country is handled by State courts. As aptly observed by a justice on my own supreme court (Shirley S. Abrahamson):

> The everyday burgler, robber, rapist, or murderer has violated State law and is tried in State court. Indeed, the bulk of all litigation in this country, civil or criminal, is handled by State courts.

Two other bills to follow will also improve the criminal justice system. Criminal justice act improvements will assist criminal trial attorneys who accept court appointments to defend individuals who are indigent. The Witness Security Act improvements will improve the treatment of individuals who testify on behalf of the Government, usually in organized crime cases.

Parenthetically, I might add that this week, my subcommittee will terminate hearings and then mark up a bill to reform the Federal bail laws. Hopefully, legislation will be processed to improve the system by which courts determine under what conditions defendants shall be released on bail.

Mr. Speaker, I present to you this overview because it is obvious that our criminal justice system is a total ecology. Like a calm pond which has just had a stone thrown into it, the justice system reverberates throughout when a specific judicial reform occurs. For example, the correctional system is the recipient of statutory revisions that occur relating to the prosecution or investigation of crimes. By improving the Criminal Justice Act, we will concomitantly improve the quality of legal representation, thereby reducing the number of collateral lawsuits for incompetent counsel. Improvements to the State courts will result in lowering the burdens on the Federal courts.

The three bills that I bring before the House, and the fourth, bail reform, to be presented later, present a unified approach to problems in our justice system. Considered together, if all of these bills are enacted into law, the net result will be substantial improvements to the delivery of justice nationwide, a more effective criminal justice system, and better relations between State and Federal courts. With this background in mind, let me now turn to discussion of the State Justice Institute Act of 1983 (H.R. 4145).

Mr. Speaker, I bring before the full House a pice of legislation that has received broad-based and bipartisan support from individuals and organizations interested in improving the administration of justice in both the State and Federal judicial systems: the "State Justice Institute Act of 1983."

I am gratified that this important piece of legislation has been cosponsored by a diverse group of 42 Members of the House of Representatives, including 18 Members of the House Judiciary Committee. I specifically would like to thank the ranking minority member of my subcommittee (Mr. MOORHEAD), my chairman (Mr. RODINO) and the ranking minority member of the full committee (Mr. FISH). Also on the bill are Mr. MAZZOLI, Mr. KINDNESS, Mr. FRANK, Mrs. SCHROEDER, Mr. SYNAR, Mr. HYDE, Mr. SAWYER, Mr. GLICKMAN, Mr. MORRISON, Mr. BERMAN (all members of my subcommittee).

Equally important is the fact that H.R. 4145 is strongly supported by the chief justices of each and every State, including the District of Columbia and Guam; the voicepiece of the State ju-liciaries (the Conference of Chief Justices); the Conference of State Court Administrators; the American Bar Association; the Judicial Conference of the United States; the National State Directors of Law Enforcement Training; the National Association of Women Judges; the National Center for State Courts; the Institute for Court Management; the National Judicial College; and other notable organizations and individuals (including former ABA President Morris Harrel, and Chief Justice Warren E. Burger). The bill has passed the Senate unanimously during the past two Congresses and this Congress bill (S. 645) is cosponsored by Senators THURMOND, DOLE, and HEFLIN, and is presently pending on the Senate floor.

H.R. 4145 authorizes the creation of a State Justice Institute to administer a national program for the improvement of State court systems. In keeping with the doctrines of federalism and separation of powers between the three coordinate branches of government, the Institute would be an independent federally chartered entity accountable to Congress for its general authority but under the direction of State judicial officers as to specific programs, priorities, and operating policies.

The goal of the legislation is to assist States in developing and maintaining judicial systems that are accessible, efficient, and just. The Institue will do this: First, by bringing minimal national and financial resources to bear on problems that affect State courts nationally, but are beyond the resources of individual States; and second, by providing a mechanism through which the Congress can appropriately consider the role of State courts when legislating on issues impacting on both the Federal and State judicial systems.

The legislation is premised on the belief that improvement in the quality of justice administered by the States is not only a goal of fundamental importance in itself but will contribute significantly to important Federal objectives, including reduced rate of growth in the caseload of the Federal judicial system and less crime in our society.

In pursuit of these goals, the legislation authorizes the expenditure of $20 million in fiscal year 1985, $25 million in fiscal year 1986, and $25 million in fiscal year 1987. The latter two figures—set by Senator GRASSLEY's floor amendment in the Senate and acceptable to me and the Committee on the Judiciary—reflect a desire to level off funding at a modest amount rather than to constantly increase the funds authorized. As to the need for the legislation, it is appropriate to paraphrase the remarks of a spokesman for the State court systems (Robert Utter, Justice, Supreme Court of Washington) who appeared before my subcommittee. Despite the growth of the Federal court system, State courts remain the courts that touch our citizens most intimately and most frequently, be it in the civil or criminal context. It is from their experiences in State courts as litigants, jurors, witnesses, or spectators that the vast majority of our citizens make their judgments as to the strengths, weaknesses, and fairness of our judicial system. To the average citizen, it matters little whether the court is Federal or State. His concern is with the fairness and effectiveness of the judicial process.

Justice William Brennan has echoed this view by stating that "the very lifeblood of courts is popular confidence that they mete out evenhanded justice * * " It has been the very deep concern of State chief justices for the improvement of their own systems that has led the Conference of State Chief Justices to propose the creation of a State Justice Institute. It is this same concern that has prompted the Chief Justice of the United States (Hon. Warren E. Burger) to write in support of creation of a State Justice Institute: " * * we cannot rest upon our laurels and do nothing in preparation for the future. More, rather than less, needs to be done—especially in the area of improving the State court systems which generally have been undersupported."

I join with the Chief Justice, the chief justices of every State and territory, and my fellow supporters here in the House, in asking for an affirmative vote on creation of a State Justice Institute.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the chairman and members of the Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties, and the Administration of Justice for their work on H.R. 4145, the State Justice Institute Act.

In assessing the need for this legislation, I think it is important to keep in mind that our system of justice is indivisible, in that State courts share with Federal courts the responsibility for enforcing the rights and duties of the Constitution and laws of the United States. In fact, over 96 percent of all the cases tried in the United States are handled by the State courts. Many of these cases are the result of Federal policies and decisions. I think it is clear that the Federal Government has a legitimate interest in strengthening and improving the State courts.

During the debate on legislation to abolish diversity, opponents often argued that it was necessary to preserve diversity, because the State courts were inadequate forums for such cases. Regardless of whether or not one accepts the validity of that argument, the State Justice Institute, by providing financial and technical assistance to the State courts, has the potential for making it feasible to return diversity cases to them. This would result in a significant reduction in the workload of the Federal courts and a substantial reduction in the expenditure required for their operation.

As the Chief Justice of the United States has noted: "We must avoid any situation in which Federal courts are pressured to become a refuge for citizens who seek a Federal forum, not because their claim is of a truly Federal nature, but because State courts are inadequate. Should our people ever lose confidence in their State courts, not only will our Federal courts become more and more overburdened, but a pervasive lack of confidence in all courts will develop."

Last Congress, the Department of Justice testified before the Courts Subcommittee that they supported the concept of a State Justice Institute, but were opposed to the legislation for budgetary reasons. However, at the end of the last Congress, the Department of Justice indicated that they would support the State Justice Institute proposal as part of a bankruptcy reform package. This Congress, the Courts Subcommittee, on June 5, 1983, requested a report from the Department of Justice on H.R. 4145. Moreover, the Department was invited to testify on the legislation but declined to do so indicating that they had no position. It was not until this morning that we learned that the Department is opposed to the bill on the basis that it "addresses problems that are more appropriately addressed by the States and which are not the responsibility of the Federal Government."

It is important to note that legislation similar to H.R. 4145 has passed the Senate in the last two Congresses, without opposition. Moreover, 43 Members of the House have cosponsored H.R. 4145 which is carefully structured to facilitate improvement in and access to the State courts. This is clearly in the national interest and, accordingly, I urge my colleagues' support for the legislation.

Mr Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

(Mr. FRENZEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I would first like to ask the distinguished gentleman from California about the costs of the third bill on the list, which is the U.S. Marshal's Service and Witness Security Reform Act.

I note that there is no CBO cost estimate, or none was available last week. Is there an estimate available at this time?

Mr. MOORHEAD. If the gentleman will yield, there is in part on the U.S. Marshal's Service and Witness Security Reform Act, which I have not discussed as yet, but which was vaguely discussed by the chairman, the cost would be $2 million of the victims' protection. As far as the cost for the child custody provisions, which would require some assistance in providing visitations for the innocent family member, whether it be the wife, or it could be the husband who did not have custody, the cost has not been projected, but it should not be anything too great.

□ 1330

The legislation would require that the Marshal's Service get the child together with the natural parent on occasion because of the separation that was really brought about by the Federal Government. It is only fair play that a parent have the right to visit the child and the Federal Government should not be able to deny that right.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

May I inquire further, has the Congress ever passed a victims' compensation payment before?

Mr. MOORHEAD. I know of none. In fact, in this particular case I very strongly support an amendment which would have taken the victims' compensation protion out of this bill because I felt that we should approach it in a comprehensive way rather than in a piecemeal way. But the majority of the committee voted against my position, feeling that because the Federal Government places the person who may have committed crimes before in the Witness Protection Act they owe a greater responsibility to the community and to people who might be the victims of their behavior.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman, and I commend him for his position.

Mr. Speaker, I am not a lawyer. I, therefore, speak to these bills from a base of fundamental ignorance, and yet when I look at them, it seems to me that this is a rather important trio of bills to be considered under the suspension process. I had hoped that we had long ago decided we would consider neither expensive nor basic policy bills under suspension.

I notice in the first bill, H.R. 4145, that that bill, at least in some of the discussion, seems to want to pick up where LEAA, which this Congress repealed, left off.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) has expired.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, the basis for passing that bill seems to be that the Conference of Chief Justices wanted it, and I am not surpised, of course, that the States would want some money from the Federal Government. I am not so sure that the Federal taxpayers, however, should be making these kinds of expenditures for another court system.

I regret, as the gentleman from California does, that the Department of Justice did not testify and certainly blew its position early in the game, making it very difficult for the rest of us to ride on whatever criticism it later produces. I do notice that is a $58 million expenditure for the taxpayers over the next 3 years, and it is one that in my judgment is at least questionable. Somebody ought to question it, and I do question it here.

The second bill, H.R. 4307, the Justice Act revision, seems to raise the compensation of attorneys. I suppose everybody needs a raise, and it is good to have people who can make a reasonable defense. Nevertheless, I think that is one that ought to come to the consideration of the House, and it ought to be able to stand the scrutiny of debate and amendment. I am disappointed that that bill, which is in excess of $60 million over the next 3 years, is also going to be handled under this bobtail procedure.

The final bill I have already discussed with the gentleman from California. The victims' compensation feature is a terribly important one. This Congress has never seen fit pass one. Now it is being thrown along with a different kind of vehicle to carry it in a very shortened and partial form. In my judgment, the Congress should make a decision on victims' compensation all in one lump, and my guess is that it could not pass in that way.

I am sorry that there is no estimate for the other features of the bill. I suspect that the cost is quite high.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that those of us who do not serve on the committee nor have legal expertise are somewhat at a disadvantage, and I feel constrained to vote against all three of the bills.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KINDNESS).

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

I would like to contribute what I can to the discussion of the three bills together since they do have a relationship which has been brought out in the discussion up to this point, and perhaps we can in so doing most intelligently deal with all three bills.

I think it is, of course, interesting to put into context what the Department of Justice has done in this situation. As an institution, I think we have suffered a bit at the hands of the Department of Justice once again, but I think we will survive. The Department of Justice seeks to confuse matters every now and then on bills like these, and I think it is regrettable. But perhaps they are a little bit rudderless at the moment, and perhaps that accounts for some or all of their problems, although they seem to be of a continuing nature.

First, let us go to the State Justice Institute bill, which is the first of the three bills. I think the position of the Department of Justice in the past on the State Justice Institute has been that they supported the concept, as has been pointed out here, but they opposed the legislation primarily for budgetary reasons. This is a matter of saying that, well, it was not clear in the first instance whether it was the Department of Justice or the Office of Management and Budget that had the stronger voice in the administration in regard to this matter, I suppose.

What it really turns out to be, though, is that the idea is a good idea. Policy is determined by the vote of the legislative branch of our Government, and the President either concurs or does not in those decisions. I think it is completely outside of the Department of Justice to have much to say about the matter at this late date. So I kind of put their views on this particular bill completely aside and say that we should pass this bill because it is needed and it is appropriate. It is indeed something that ought to be pursued, and the prompt action by this House, along with the other body, which is moving in the same direction, would lead us in a very constructive direction. It is very much needed.

How often do we hear people complain about the trend of justice, particularly criminal justice, in the States of our United States? Quite frequently. People will complain sometimes about their perception of what is happening in the Federal courts, but most frequently what they are really saying is, "I wonder if I can have confidence in the way things are being handled in the State courts throughout this country. We are getting a trend of decisions I don't like," or what have you.

The State Justice Institute is one tool that can be used to help improve upon the administration of justice in criminal matters in the State courts, and I think it is very important that that stimulus be given from the Federal level.

As for the other two bills, the Criminal Justice Act revision is a bill where an adjustment is being made, and there has been no adjustment since 1970. I think it is very important that there be a realistic adjustment in the fees that are provided to those who are burdened with providing criminal representation to defendants in the Federal court system.

In August 1983 the Department of Justice said that such a measure was long overdue. Well, it is just 1 year longer overdue now, and I think it is appropriate for this House to act. I would certainly urge that that bill be supported, too.

As to H.R. 4249, the U.S. Marshals Service and Witness Security Reform Act, which has gotten, I suppose, the most discussion here, it is one area in the view of some of us—and perhaps it would be the majority of us when we have discussion in debate—where victims ought to be compensated. Victims clearly ought to be compensated for injuries incurred as a result of a Federal program.

I do not happen to believe that the Federal Government ought to get into the business of compensating victims of crime on a wholesale basis. I do feel that those victims of crime who find themselves in that position with no one they can go against, only because the Federal Government is operating a program of witness protection, giving secret identities to people and putting them in a new community and a new location and so on, where they are pretty much free to do what they will, and that includes wrong as well as right, and some people are likely to be injured thereby. That is the kind of circumstance in which the victim really ought to have some compensation when injured as a result of the operation of that program.

The alternative to that, of course, is to do away with the witness protection program and some of us would really rather see that. The business of protecting Federal witnesses who will testify against organized crime figures ordinarily is what we are taking about. Give them a new identity, a new location to live and put them away someplace until they testify and thereafter have a secure life. If you are going to have that kind of program, it seems to me that you have also got to protect those people who are innocent bystanders and are injured or damaged by it.

The liability is limited to a fund of $2 million.

We are not creating a food stamp program here. I think it is regrettable that the Department of Justice does not see fit to support all three of these bills, but in the absence of their support, I would urge that the House exercise its judgment in an affirmative fashion. All three bills deserve our support.

● Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, in endorsing H.R. 4145, the State Justice Institute Act, I would like to point out that Federal funding for State courts has been provided through LEAA since 1968. As Prof. Dan Meador, the former head of the Office for Improvements in the Administration of Justice pointed out in prior testimony before the Courts Subcommittee:

> The first—and perhaps the most important thing—to be said about this proposal is that it does not represent any new or radical departure from already established Federal—State relationships. The State Justice Institute—far from incorporating any new concepts or creating any new Federal monetary program—would simply represent an improved, sounder, and more efficient means of providing fiscal support to the efforts of the State judiciaries. . .

The State Justice Institute Act was drafted by the Conference of Chief Justices and Conference of State Court Administrators in an effort to address the problems that were encountered under LEAA such as separation of powers issues. I am confident that the current proposal will be successful in avoiding these problems. Moreover, the State Justice Institute Act will provide a valuable mechanism to aid Congress in their consideration of legislation that impacts on State court jurisdiction.

I would like to commend the Conference of Chief Justices as well as the members of the Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties, and the Administration of Justice for their work on H.R. 4145 and especially note the yeoman efforts of Lawrence Cook, chief judge of the State of New York, on behalf of the legislation. H.R. 4145 is a solid proposal and I urge its adoption.●

● Mr. McGRATH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 4145, the State of Justice Institute Act. This legislation represents the most valuable effort made by this body to aid State and local governments in strengthening and improving their judicial systems.

The responsibility of protecting the rights of all citizens under the Constitution is shared by State and Federal courts. Creation of the State Justice Institute will assist State courts in meeting their increasing obligations under both State and Federal law by providing funds necessary for technical assistance, education research and training. This will encourage the modernization of State court systems with respect to efficient management of caseloads, budgeting, and development of reliable statistical data. Establishment of State Justice Institute will place responsibility for improvement of State court systems directly on the judicial officials charged with this responsibility under their own constitutions and laws, thus respecting the principles of separation of powers and federalism.

I would like to point out that the measure before us today not only provides funds for valuable education and training, it also prohibits any duplication of existing programs or activities. As we strive to more closely monitor the spending of Federal tax dollars, thus provision is an assurance that funds we allocate today will only be used for much needed court improvement programs.

It is important for us to remove the competition between State judiciaries and State executive agencies for Federal assistance. A national program of assistance specifically for the improvement of State courts will create a beneficial environment for the administration of State court systems. In addition, the State Justice Institute will fill a current void by representing State courts in future national policy decisions that will affect the Nation's total justice system.

I urge my colleagues to join me in improving the State court systems by supporting H.R. 4145.●

● Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the State Justice Institute Act of 1983 which would establish a State Justice Institute to administer a national program directed to the improvement of justice delivery systems at the State level.

The State Justice Institute would be formed as an independent federally chartered nonprofit corporation authorized to award grants for education, training, and research programs aimed at developing more responsive State judicial systems. The institute would also serve as a clearinghouse of justice-related information to help improve the administration of justice in State courts.

This legislation brings forth a long overdue and sorely needed national initiative to aid States cope with the overwhelming criminal activity the Nation suffers. There is an urgent need for better trained judicial personnel, a greater sharing of justice-related information by State courts and the development of new aggressive concepts in the administration of justice as proposed by this measure. We cannot procrastinate the implementation of this joint effort crafted to secure more efficient, accessible and just judicial systems all across the Nation. The State Justice Institute, even though it would have limited resources, would give the necessary direction and guidance to make this national intitiatve a successful endeavor.

I urge my colleagues to vote for the passage of this highly important legislation which would lend a big hand in our quest to insure that justice is served in every court of our Nation.●

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of all three bills on the suspension calendar today from the Committee on the Judiciary. H.R. 4145 authorizes the creation of a State Justice Institute; H.R. 4307 is a bill to rationalize and update the Criminal Justice Act; and H.R. 4249 is a bill to reform the witness protection program and the U.S. Marshal's Service.

Each of these bills was carefully crafted by the committee with bipartisan support. Each of these measures was cosponsored by a majority of the members of both parties on the Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties, and the Administration of Justice. Each of these measures addresses significant problems in our criminal justice system. First, the State Justice Institute recognizes that over 95 percent of all criminal cases are processed in State courts and that improvements to these institutions is central to an improvement in the criminal justice system, both criminal and civil. Second, the Criminal Justice Act reform measure adjusts the rates to be paid to assigned counsel in criminal cases to adjust for inflation. The net result of this change will be an improvement in the quality of justice in the Federal courts and less appeals for incompetent counsel. Finally, the bill reforming the witness protection program acknowledges the importance of this program to the prosecution of organized crime cases while at the same time responding to the legitimate concerns of crime victims and minor children of unrelocated parents.

I am disappointed to learn that the Office of Management and Budget has, at the last minute, decided to oppose these bills. While these bills were before the committee, we received no adverse comments from the administration. They have been supported by many of our Republican colleagues on the committee.

I believe that the bills which we are debating today are well drafted and each fulfills its purpose. I urge my colleagues to support them, notwithstanding the last-minute opposition from the administration, which I do not believe to be well founded.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KASTENMEIER) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4145, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 5 of rule I and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and to include extraneous matter, on the bill just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Not less than three years after the effective date of the Criminal Justice Act Revision of 1984, the Judicial Conference is authorized to raise the maximum hourly rates specified in this paragraph up to the aggregate of the overall average percentages of the adjustments in the rates of pay under the General Schedule made pursuant to section 5305 of title 5, United States Code, on or after such effective date.
